Hidden Gems

Wayford Woods

A magical woodland and meadow walk, home to fairies. Down a bumpy one way track that looks like it is leading to nowhere with no sign posts, a real hidden gem. In the right season (usually end of April and beginning of May) the woods are bursting with colour with bluebells on the ground and the rhododendrons bushes in bloom. A quiet and beautiful place to walk or picnic.

Lewesdon Hill and Pilsdon Pen

Two Iron Age hill forts on Dorset's highest peaks offering fantastic views of the Marshwood Vale, all the way to the sea.

Surrounded by woodland, Lewesdon Hill at 915 feet (279 metres) is the highest point in Dorset. It is owned by the National Trust and is the site of an Iron Age hill fort. Parts of the original ramparts are still visible and provide an excellent platform to take in the magnificent views of the Marshwood Vale and English Channel – so good in fact that it was the site for one of the Armada Beacons in 1588 to warn of the impending Spanish attack.

At 909 feet (277 meters), Pilsdon is Dorset's second highest hill. A Drurotrigian hill fort (once populated with 14 roundhouses) sits on the top of the hill offering long reaching views of the Marshwood Vale and down to the coast.

Church of St Candida and Holy Cross

Hidden away in Whitchurch Canonicorum is the church of St Candida and Holy Cross, dating from 890AD and the only church in England (apart from Westminster) still to house the relics of its Patron Saint, St Wite within the church. St Wite was a martyr who died at the time of the Viking invasions and was renowned for her healing powers. The flag of St. Wite makes up part of the Dorset flag.
